Kate Osborne is a flautist and teacher based near Peterborough. She has performed widely throughout the area with Fergus Black, harpist Eleanor Turner and with her own flute trio. She has recently performed recitals with Fergus Black at Belvoir Castle and for the Treasury Music Society, and appeared as soloist in Pergolesi's Flute Concerto in Stamford in a concert to mark the composer's 300th anniversary. Her extensive repertoire spans the Baroque to the 20th century with a particular specialism on the French Romantic works.

Fergus Black was born in Scotland in 1958. After taking his degree at St. Andrews University, Fergus studied music in the USA at the University of Pennsylvania and at UCLA, before returning to the UK. He works as a musician, performing and teaching – piano, organ and singing, both privately and in schools. He is the President of Peterborough Young Singers, and conducts Burghley Voices and St Martin's Singers. He lives in Peterborough with his wife, Helen. His web site is at www.fergusblack.com
